NURSES’ WORKPLACE STRESSORS

ACHMAD FATHI
19810120 200501 1 001

FAKULTAS KEPERAWATAN
UNIVERSITAS SUMATERA UTARA
JULY, 2011
PREFACE

This paper presents the nurses’ workplace stressors which are always happen between nurses and their hospital environment. Literature review methods was occupied in order to identify the nurses’ workplace stressors. It shows that several factors contribute to workplace stressors.

This paper is addressed to nurse administrators and nurse educators, as well. These people play a very important role in the nursing management in practice and also in nursing education. An understanding of nurses’ workplace stressors will guide the nurse administrators to anticipate such stressors. In the end, nurses’ job satisfaction and nursing quality will increase.

Finally, the author hopes valuable advices and constructive feedback from the readers. This work is not a perfect paper and needs some inputs to make it better.

Medan, July 2011

Author,

Achmad Fathi, S.Kep., Ns., MNS
CONTENTS

Preface............................................................................................................................................... ii
Contents............................................................................................................................................. iii
Chapter I Introduction ..................................................................................................................... 1
Chapter II Literature Review ........................................................................................................... 2
  1. Concept of Nurses’ Workplace Stressors .............................................................................. 2
  2. Workplace Stressors in Nursing ......................................................................................... 3
  3. Factors Relating to Nurses’ Workplace Stressors ............................................................... 5
  4. Measuring Nurses’ Workplace Stressors .............................................................................. 6
Chapter III Conclusion .................................................................................................................... 9
References ......................................................................................................................................... 10